The Martha Moxley Case

The Martha Moxley case is a tragic and complex story that has captured public attention for decades. Martha Moxley was a 15-year-old high school student from Greenwich, Connecticut, who was brutally murdered on October 30, 1975. The case remained unsolved for many years, with no one charged despite suspicions and extensive investigations. It wasn't until 2002 that Michael Skakel, a neighbor of Moxley and nephew of Ethel Kennedy, was convicted of the murder. However, the legal proceedings did not end there; Skakel's conviction was later overturned, and after a series of appeals and retrials, the state of Connecticut decided not to retry the case in 2020. The murder of Martha Moxley and the subsequent legal battles have been the subject of numerous books and media coverage, reflecting the enduring mystery and controversy surrounding this case.
